Boozefox

Math of the Afterwrath

"What plagues this ancient thang?

From the inside it slides

and grows

from brain to nose

and eyes from stone."

Boozefox, an Austin based collective collecting consortium, in cooperation with Lawndale Art Center is pleased to announce the first and only viewing of their most cherished artifact. Salvaged from the Gulf of Mexico inside the Chicxulub Crater, this Pre-Khormusan monument resembles that of a giant head. Made entirely of tektites and partially melted zircons, the head weighs in excess of 450 tons, radiates substantial heat, and seems to change its shape and features periodically.

Due to an inexplicably contracted ex-post-facto-virus, the artifact is being rapidly consumed from within. The virus is currently boring large tunnels from an enormous, spherical abscess which suddenly appeared yesterday. The virus is carving its way outward and is producing a distinctly weird smell. In light of the current consumption rate, the artifact will be on view for a limited time only.

Boozefox is an Austin based collective formed in 2007 in Austin, TX that primarily makes large scale, multimedia installations. The four members Mike Phalan, Jules Buck Jones, Scott Eastwood and Drew Liverman met in Virginia and all attended Virginia Commonwealth University.

Potential Modulations

Potential Modulations explores the use of mass-produced objects in an art context and hopes to start a dialogue by asking questions such as how do we individualize or personalize things that are inherently not produced to be individual? Other themes explored include the idea of potential and the concepts of what could be versus what is. Utilizing the Mezzanine Gallery, Harrington plans to install several sculptural elements to create a new modular sculpture that adjusts to the possibilities of different sites. These assemblages explore the definitions between sculpture and installation because it must factor the given site into its implementation. For example, the effect on an installation's arrangement can come from the differing architectural placement of electrical outlets (if any) from various sites, yet the work retains its sculptural identity from location to location.

Tobiah Mundt

BEING

BEING is an exhibit of fantastical creatures realized through sculpted wool and fabric. These works by artist Tobiah Mundt interpret and explore how we read and react to human emotion through anthropomorphic and zoomorphic forms, rendering feelings through facial expression, color, shape, and physicality. Her works are created with a process called sculptural needle felting by which raw wool is shaped into three-dimensional form using barbed needles.

Tobiah Mundt received her Bachelor of Architecture from Howard University in 2000 and is a self-taught fiber artist who lives and works in Houston, TX and Washington, DC. Her work has been shown in St. Louis, Austin, Seattle, Los Angeles, and Maryland. In 2009 she curated Mortal Plush: I Am Not Your Toy, an exhibit of fifty fiber artists from around the world at Art Whino Gallery of National Harbor. She currently teaches needle felting at Sew Crafty Houston.

Logan Sebastian Beck

Following Huck Finn

"The road trip is an undeniably American idea, one that is ingrained in every American by its authors and photographers. As Americans, the ideas of 'manifest destiny' and 'the pursuit of happiness' are axes on which our cultural identities are built upon."- Logan Sebastian Beck his death. Traveling up the Mississippi river— following, in reverse, the path of Huck Finn and Jim in The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, Beck seeks out the remnants of Huck's world as well as the new American rural ideal and documents his findings through photography.

Logan Sebastian Beck was born and raised in Houston, Texas. He has been exploring photography since his teenage years. It has always been an addendum to his travels around the world, a way of exploring strange places with a critical eye. His art is a product of relentless documentation, a way of connecting to people of different social and cultural backgrounds— instead of showing how we are all different, he explores the ways we are all the same. He currently studies Visual Arts at Rice University and expects to graduate in May 2011. He was the director of Matchbox Gallery, the student-run exhibition space at Rice University from Fall 2009 to Spring 2010.

Those Who Fell through the Cracks

A Mobile Photography Exhibition

Hurricane Katrina Survivors Five Years After the Storm

in collaboration with the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston and Houston Center for Photography

Those Who Fell Through the Cracks is a traveling mobile exhibition of large-scale mural photographs by Stanley Greene and Kadir van Lohuizen showing Hurricane Katrina's aftermath over the last five years. It is a powerful visual document of Katrina's effects on Gulf Coast residents and the struggles they face to this day in re-establishing their lives. The photographs cover the interior and exterior of a highly innovative 24' itinerant truck as it debuts in Houston and travels to New Orleans in September 2010 during Katrina's fifth anniversary. Those Who Fell Through the Cracks is an interactive documentation of the United States in the beginning of the 21st century, and a testament to the power of images to bring new awareness and sensitivity to communities, and foment systemic change.

Photographer Stanley Greene was born in New York in 1949. As a teenager, Greene was a member of the Black Panthers and an anti-Vietnam War activist. A founding member of SF Camerawork, an exhibition space for avant-garde photography, Greene has photographed wars and poverty in Africa, the former Soviet Union, Central America, Asia, and the Middle East. He has won seven World Press Photo awards for his work around the world. His work has been published in Libération, New York Times Magazine, Newsweek, Rolling Stone, Paris-Match, Time, Stern and Fortune, among others. Greene published the photo book Open Wound: Chechnya 1994-2003 (Trolley), and won the Alicia Patterson and the prestigious W. Eugene Smith Award in 2004. He was awarded a Katrina Media Fellowship from the Open Society Institute in 2006. He is a founding member of the photo agency NOOR.
